Re: Call for a strong CFPB payday lending rule

Dear Director Cordray:

West Virginia has a proud history of keeping payday lenders out of our communities. The signers of this letter respectfully urge the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) to put an end to car title and other forms of predatory high-cost lending once and for all. We are part of the 90 million Americans who are far better off without payday lending in their states.

The battle against predatory payday lending in West Virginia has been a huge success. In 2005, when Internet payday lending tried to take hold here, West Virginia fought back. Internet payday lenders were forced to cancel debts and provide cash refunds to borrowers. There were over 110 settlements (84 with lenders and 26 with collection agencies). The West Virginia Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division was able to obtain roughly $1.34 million in cash refunds and $1.11 million in cancelled debts, for a total settlements value of $2.45 million.

We cannot go backwards in this fight. We urge you to set a high bar for the entire country and issue a rule that enhances, rather than diminishes, our existing protections. Like you, we appreciate that there is a tremendous amount at stake for low-income families and communities throughout the country.

West Virginia has one of the highest rates of poverty in the nation. Our citizens are easy targets of predatory lenders and can quickly fall into a cycle of debt. We are a small state with a large percent of our population living on our borders with five other states. It is important that our residents are protected both in and out of state.

Many in West Virginia live from paycheck to paycheck. The last thing we need here is a plague of predatory, high-cost, small-dollar loans to dig them into an even deeper hole — precisely what could result if the CFPB were to issue a weak payday lending rule.

A strong rule would, at a minimum:

- Strengthen the enforceability of existing usury laws and other state consumer protections. The CFPB rule should provide that a violation of state usury or other consumer protection laws is an unfair, deceptive and abusive act and practice (UDAAP).

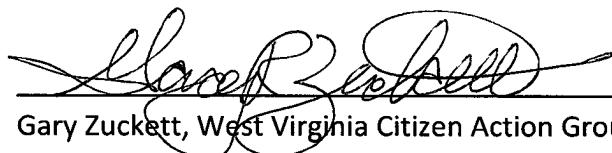

The rule should provide that payday loans are subject to the law of the state where the borrower resides. And it should establish that those who facilitate illegal loans, including through payment processing, lead generating, and advertising, are engaging in unfair, deceptive, and abusive practices.

- Require a meaningful “ability to repay” standard without exceptions, and with no safe harbors or legal immunity for poorly underwritten loans. The CFPB rule should include a strong “ability to repay” requirement for all loans, based on income and expenses. It should not provide any safe harbors. A weak rule, particularly one that allows lenders to make unaffordable loans or that includes a safe harbor, would give payday lenders unwarranted ammunition to knock down existing state protections, as they have been trying to do for years. Rather, the rule should provide that loans that do not meet a meaningful ability to repay standard are per se unfair.
- Include enforceable protections against abuses by lead generators and other third-party marketing affiliates that sell people’s sensitive personal and financial information to payday lenders. The sale of this information exposes people already in dire financial straits to risks of fraud and other exploitative business practices.
- Affirm that state interest rate caps are the most effective ways to protect people from payday and other predatory, high-cost loans. Although the CFPB may not set an interest rate cap, it is critical that states maintain their caps and other consumer protections against abusive high-cost lending.

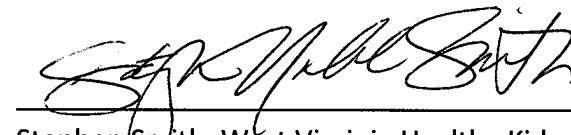

West Virginia has shown that strong, enforceable prohibitions against payday lending constitute sound public policy and clearly benefit the public interest. Financially struggling West Virginia residents have found ways other than abusive, unfair, and predatory payday loans to address their financial needs. Payday lending would, as it has elsewhere where permitted, make these residents worse off, not better.

For these reasons, we urge you to issue a strong rule that in no way undermines West Virginia’s clear ban on payday lending, and that enhances West Virginia’s protections against abusive payday lending practices. Indeed, a strong rule will benefit people everywhere.

		The CFPB must enact a rule that protects consumers everywhere from the scourge of payday lending. However, states should not be prevented from banning payday lending altogether as we have done in WV. It may be true that persons need access to short term loans. However, payday lending is not the answer; it only causes financial ruin to consumers who are already facing dire circumstances.
